I am currently involved in my dissertation research. My dissertation, “Transatlantic Crossings: American and Ottoman Perceptions in a Progressive Age, 1880-1910,” is the first scholarly analysis of the social dimensions of the relations between the United States and Ottoman Empire. It examines the ways in which prevailing American and Ottoman political and religious views affected two particular groups, American missionaries in the Ottoman Empire and Ottoman immigrants in the United States.